Motto:

Virtus propter se

Motto Translated:

Virtue for its own sake.

Crest:

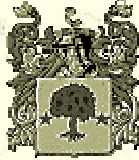

An arm grasping a sword encircled by an oak wreath.

Coat of Arms:

A silver shield with an oak tree between two red stars.

This is an ancient Irish surname. Spelling variations of this family name include: O'Luby, Luby, Lube and Looby. Originally recorded in the Gaelic as O'Lubaigh. It has the unusual meaning of "The male descendant of the cunning one" This is or was almost certainly a reference to the original chief of the clan, as a "nickname"

The O'Lubaigh clan are believed to originate from county Tipperary in the baronies of Iffa and Offa. There is a place called Ballylooby or the place of the Looby's where the name originated in ancient times. In 1665, there were 20 families called Looby or Luby recorded in the Hearth tax registers for Tipperary. There are some noted Looby's of County Kildare that joined the Army of King James 2nd in and around 1690, it is claimed that Lieutenant William Luby of County Kildare joined the army of King James 11nd. When King James was defeated at the battle of the Boyne, William Luby was captured and subsequently outlawed for high treason. However he later managed to have this sentence reversed, and at the same time he changed his name to Lube. There are a few recordings of Lube in Counties Kildare and Meath, and these people are presumably descendants. Thomas Clarke Luby, (1822 - 1901) was a prominent Fenian, as well as being a journalist, and a Protestant, not the usual qualifications for being what was then regarded as a rebel. Ballylooby in Irish is Beal Atha Lubaigh meaning mouth or pass of Looby's Ford a village near Waterford in Tipperary.

Geagan Family

Motto:

Semper patriae servire praesto

Motto Translated:

Always ready to serve my country

Crest:

A gold or yellow greyhound walking

Coat of Arms:

A silver shield with a red lion, between three red hands

The name Geagan is a derivation of the Irish name Gaughan. This name has many spellings, some of which are Geoghegan, Gagin, Gagen and Gaughan. The name Gaughan in Gaelic means "Descendent of little Gaibhteach (plaintive)". The spelling Gagen should not be confused with the French name of the same, which is very common in French Canada.

The family coat of arms is difficult to find, however one reference to it that I have found shows the "Red hand" of Ulster and the "Red Lion" of Scotland. The fact that the coat of arms contains the "Red Lion" of Scotland may indicate that the family is of Scot-Irish origins. Edward MacLysaght, first Chief Herald of Ireland, gives the blazon (heraldic description) of the MacGeoghegan coat of arms as "Argent a lion rampant between three dexter hands coupéd at the wrist gules. Crest: A greyhound passant or." In simple English this translates to "on a silver or white shield, a red lion attacking, between three red hands severed at the wrist. Crest - a gold or yellow greyhound walking." The motto "semper patriae servire praesto" is not recorded in Ireland, may be found in Burke's General Armory. It means "always ready to serve my country".

One interesting family legend that has been passed down through the generations is that a Spanish prince once married into the Gaughan family in Ireland. A fact of history may lend some credence to this "Legend". During the Spanish armada many ships were ship wrecked on the west coast of Ireland and the survivors intermarried with the local populace.
